

VALUES & NORMS: NOT SELF-EVIDENT

The intuitionists claim that values and norms are self-evident or easily refuted by pointing to the enormous variety of values and norms across cultures and even within a single complex culture.

Moreover, we can reason about values; e.g. we can dispute that something is primarily valuable, by showing that it does not meet a basic need.

2w, 83233

Fi 394